

France in America

MAG member Gary France fulfilled a lifelong dream to ride across the USA

This is a visually stunning 400 page volume offering a unique mix of Americana, travel, motorcycling and a personal account of male mid-life transition. The book showcases an extraordinary 21,000 mile solo journey by a man leaving behind his professional life and identity to explore America and fulfil a life-long dream.

In a few short years, Gary's self-description changed from "Project Management Executive" to "Writer, traveller and motorcyclist, who is happiest when combining all three."

Riding with just his thoughts for company, Gary's description of his four month trip unfolds through a down-to-earth record of what he saw, who he met and what he felt on the road, backed up with an impressive photographic inventory. As he clicks up the miles from the New England states, through the Midwest and the Rockies, and closing in the desert states of the Pacific coast, his thoughts, language and photographs become increasingly reflective and vivid as the 'journey' progresses.

The book will resonate with many. Not just those who wish they could make such a road trip, but also with the many men who have faced the unspoken uncertainties and reassessments of midlife.

This is not only a detailed guide about where to go and what to see in the USA. It is also a living testimony to the maxim that travel is not so much about the destination as it is about the journey itself. One man living his dream, and carefully cornering through the opportunities that midlife presents. AT £27.50 for the paperback and £49.50 in hardback, it isn't cheap but from what we've seen this is a seriously high end product.
